Repsol has been chosen as the European company offering the best investor relations in its sector by the specialist publication IR Magazine. As well as being named top of the oil and gas sector, the company was also recognised for its crisis communications brought on by the confiscation of YPF in April 2012. Since then, Repsol has shown its potential and has achieved highly positive results in all of its business areas, which in turn has meant that 95% of analysts recommend the company.

The IR Magazine awards – Europe, held this year for the 23rd time, recognise best practices in investor relations in European companies. These prestigious awards are internationally respected by leading companies and top professionals in the field.

The winners are chosen by means of a survey taken by 700 institutional investors and analysts from across Europe and some of the continent's most prominent companies have been awarded. Over 400 investor relations professionals, financial directors, analysts and investors attended the awards ceremony, which was held in London.

Repsol's work dedicated to investor relations has been awarded on several occasions, most recently by the specialist magazine Institutional Investor. The company has also been honoured three times consecutively by the renowned Thomson Reuters Extel Survey ranking. In the most recent edition, Repsol's Investor Relations team, its CFO Miguel Martínez and current Corporate Finance Director María Victoria Zingoni were all named in top position.
